

Setting intentions

Setting intentions is a popular way of beginning a facilitated session. As part of the introduction and check-in, the facilitator will ask all participants to share their intention for the day.

This supports group focus and alignment. Participants who have shared their intention at the start of a meeting will be more likely to actively participate later (online and in real life!).

Start your facilitation journey by setting your own intentions.

These prompts are called “open sentences”. The idea is to offer the beginning of a sentence, which you will then complete in your own words. Don’t think about it too hard, just write down thoughts as they come.

INDIVIDUAL REFLECTION

>> When I hear the word facilitation, the first things that come to mind are...

>> I am interested in learning more because...

>> One thing I hope to learn is...

Keep this page in your records to document your explorations!

